

Agreement for Publication and Sharing of Rights

Introduction and Implementation

This Agreement reflects the position that the Author should retain the copyright in the Article and have explicit rights to use the Article in future research, teaching, and other projects. The Columbia Social Work Review, as publisher, should have rights to publish the article in various formats and to license the publication of the Article through third-party database providers. This Agreement is based on the assumption that the Author is in fact the copyright owner (as the Author confirms in Paragraph 5). The Author should inform the Columbia Social Work Review if, for example, the Author created the Article “for hire” (e.g., as an employee) or as an officer or employee of the U.S. Government, or if the Author has previously transferred the copyright, perhaps to an employer or another publisher.

The Agreement permits broad open access of the Article as the parties desire or as required by funding agencies, such as the NIH Public Access Policy. The Agreement also permits the Columbia Social Work Review to publish the Article online without restrictions on access, and the Author may post the Article for Internet access and contribute it to an institutional or discipline-based repository.

The Agreement permits the Columbia Social Work Review to publish the Article with a Creative Commons license. The use of such a license indicates to readers that they may make appropriate uses of the Article in their own study, teaching, or other activities.

Agreement for Publication and Sharing of Rights

The Columbia Social Work Review (the “Review”), a publication of Columbia University, is pleased to accept for publication your article (hereinafter the “Article”).

In order to better manage the rights associated with your Article, and to provide optimal access to it, we believe that you (the “Author”) should hold the copyright to your Article, but that you should grant to the Review appropriate rights to use your Article for the benefit of the scholarly community. The parties believe that this arrangement will properly serve our shared interest in reaching the largest readership possible. To that end, the parties agree as follows:

1. Acceptance for Publication. The Review is pleased to accept the Article for publication, and it is currently scheduled for publication in the Review’s upcoming issue.

2. Author Does not Assign the Copyright. Nothing in this Agreement shall be construed as an assignment of the copyright in the Article to the Review.

3. License to the Review. The Author hereby licenses to the Review the irrevocable, nonexclusive, and royalty-free rights as follows:

3.1 The Review may publish the Article in any format, including electronic and print media. Specifically, this license includes the right to reproduce, publicly distribute and display, and transmit the Article or portions thereof in any manner, through any medium now in existence or developed in the future, including but not limited to print, electronic, and digital media, computerized retrieval systems, and other formats.

3.2 The Review may prepare translations and abstracts and other similar adaptations of the Article in furtherance of its publication of the Article.

3.3 The Review may use the Author’s name, likeness, and institutional affiliation in connection with any use of the Article and in promoting the Article or the Review.

3.4 The Review may exercise these rights directly or by means of third parties. The Review may authorize third-party publishers, aggregators, and printers to publish the Article or to include the Article in databases or other services. [Examples of such third parties include Westlaw, Lexis, and EBSCO.]

3.5 The Review may without further permission from the Author transfer, assign, or sublicense the rights that the Review has pursuant to this Agreement.

3.6 In order to foster wider access to the Article, especially for the benefit of the nonprofit community, the Author hereby grants to the Review the authority to publish the Article with a Creative Commons “Attribution” license. [The Author should consult the Creative Commons website (www.creativecommons.org) for further information.]

3.7 The Journal may submit the Article to Academic Commons — Columbia University’s online research repository— in order to foster its open access availability to the research and scholarly community and to ensure its long term preservation for future use and reuse. Academic Commons, or any successor initiative based at Columbia, is licensed by the Author to reproduce, publicly distribute and display, and transmit the Article or portions thereof in digital form. The Author also licenses to Academic Commons the right to perform the digital preservation actions on the Article (e.g. format migration, feature extraction, etc.) that are required to ensure its availability, identity, persistence, renderability, understandability, and authenticity in the long term.

3.8 This license of rights to the Review shall take effect immediately. In the event that the Review does not publish the Article, this license to the Review shall terminate upon written notification by the Review to the Author, or upon termination of all publication by the Review. To the extent that moral rights may apply to the Article, this agreement does not affect the moral rights of the Author in or to the Article.

4. Rights of the Author. Without suggesting any limit on other rights that the Author may have with respect to the Article, the Author retains the following rights. To the extent that the Review holds similar rights with respect to the Article consistent with this Agreement, the Author shall hold these rights on a nonexclusive basis. To the extent that the Article includes edits and other contributions by the staff of the Review, the rights of the Author in this Paragraph include the right to use such edits and contributions.

4.1 The Author may publish the Article in another scholarly journal, in a book, or by other means. The Author may exercise this right of publication only after the date of first publication of the Article in the Review in any format.

4.2 The Author shall, without limitation, have the right to use the Article in any form or format in connection with the Author’s teaching, conference presentations, lectures, other scholarly works, and for all of Author’s academic and professional activities.

4.3 The Author shall at any time have the right to make, or to authorize others to make, a preprint or a final published version of the Article available in digital form over the Internet, including, but not limited to, a website under the control of the Author or the Author’s employer or through digital repositories including, but not limited to, those maintained by scholarly societies, funding agencies, or the Author's employer. This right shall include, without limitation, the right of the Author to permit public access to the Article as part of a repository or through a service or domain maintained by the Author's employing institution or a service as required by law or by agreement with a funding agency. The Review may in its discretion deposit the Article with any digital repository consistent with deposits permitted by the Author under this paragraph. [Examples of such repositories include SSRN, arXiv.org, PubMed Central, and Academic Commons at Columbia University.]

4.4 Any of the foregoing permitted uses of the Article, or of a work based substantially on the Article, shall include an appropriate citation to the Article, stating that it has been or is to be published in the Review, with name and date of the Review publication and the Internet address for the website of the Review.

5. Author's Representations. The Author represents and warrants that the Author owns the copyright in the Article. The Author represents and warrants that the Article has not been published before, constitutes the Author's own original work, and does not violate, in whole or in part, any existing copyright. The Author also represents and warrants that to the best of the Author's knowledge and belief, the Article does not defame, invade the privacy of, violate the civil rights of, or otherwise infringe the rights of any person. The Author represents and warrants that the Author has full power to enter into this Agreement and to convey the rights herein granted. If the Article has more than one author, the Author by signing below represents that he or she has authority to act on behalf of all other authors.

6. Editing of the Article. This Agreement is subject to the understanding that the ordinary editing processes of the Review will be diligently pursued and that the Article will not be published by the Review unless, in its final form, it is acceptable both to the Author and to the Review.

6.1 Because of the demands of publishing on a deadline, the Review may in its discretion make any changes in the Article three days before the final proof is sent to the printer in preparation for final publication.

7. Jurisdiction. This Agreement shall be construed as a contract made under the laws of the State of New York, and copyright issues shall be governed by the federal law of the United States.

8. Merger. This Agreement constitutes the sole expression of all understandings between the Author and the Review with respect to the Review's agreement to publish the Article and with respect to copyright and republication rights. This Agreement shall not be modified other than in writing.

Please sign where indicated below. Return the signed original Agreement to the Review as soon as possible. The Review urges that the Author permanently retain a copy of this Agreement for future reference.

The Author:

Signed: _____

Printed Name: _____

Date: _____

The Review:

Signed: _____

Title: _____

Date: _____